

Contents

List of Illustrations		vii
List of Tables		ix
Acknowledgments		xi
List of Abbreviations		xiii
Introduction	Expertise, Development, and the State at the Climax of Empire	1
Chapter 1.	Setting the Terms of the Debate: Science, the State, and the “New Imperialism”	21
Chapter 2.	Developing the “Imperial Estate”: Early Patronage and Pessimism for Colonial Scientific Research and Technical Assistance, 1895–1914	54
Chapter 3.	Science for Development: The Expansion of Colonial Agricultural Research and Advisory Networks, 1914–35	90
Chapter 4.	The “Human Side” of Development: Trusteeship and the Turn to “Native” Health and Education, 1918–35	117
Chapter 5.	View from the Field: Rethinking Colonial Agricultural and Medical Knowledge between the Wars, 1920–40	144
Chapter 6.	View from Above: The Consolidation of Knowledge and the Reorganization of the Colonial Office, 1935–45	179

Chapter 7.	Triumph of the Expert: Development, Environment, and the “Second Colonial Occupation,” 1945–60	207
Conclusion	Postcolonial Consultants, Agrarian Doctrines of Development, and the Legacies of Late Colonialism	254
Notes		277
Bibliography		361
Index		395