

Preface

In writing these papers over a period of some fifteen years, we have incurred many debts to institutions and individuals that have helped our research and sharpened our thoughts, and which we gratefully acknowledge. Kenya has been fortunate in attracting a remarkable body of scholarship since its independence. The calibre of this work has facilitated and inspired our own. Individual authors and works are cited in our footnotes, but we would like to record some special thanks here. This is a more invidious exercise than most; so much good work has been done; and by an unusually generous group of scholars. But we have particularly important debts, both intellectual and personal, to Dave Anderson, David Cohen, Fred Cooper, Michael Cowen, Tabitha Kanogo, Greet Kershaw, Colin Leys, Godfrey Muriuki, Atieno Odhiambo, John Spencer, David Throup, Richard Waller and Luise White.

Our work has been made possible by the remarkable collections and efficient staff of the Public Record Office, London, and, especially, of the Kenya National Archives in Nairobi and its Chief Archivist, Mr M. Musembi. Professor Ahmed Salim, head of the Department of History at the University of Nairobi, offered us the facilities and hospitality of his department during our most recent visit in July and August 1988. He and Professor Henry Mwaniki, head of the Department of History at Kenyatta University, also enabled us to present some of our findings in seminars of their staff and graduate students.

We would also like to thank the Social Science and Humanities Research Council of Canada, the Smuts Memorial Fund of the University of Cambridge, and the School of Graduate Studies and Advisory Research Committee of Queen's University for grants that over the years have made our research possible. The Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge, have enabled us to work together during the closing stages of this work.

Preface

To James Currey, long-suffering publisher and friend, we owe the idea for this book. His encouragement and his patience through repeated delays were vital in bringing it to fruition. Roger Thomas provided essential editorial assistance; while Dr Jocelyn Murray efficiently compiled the index and glossary.

Finally, we thank our wives, Elaine Berman and Moya Lonsdale, for their patience and understanding in the face of our repeated absences, especially during summer holidays, and our distracted absorption in the problems of Kenya and colonial Africa. We dedicate this volume to them.
